WEYE began with waste to wealth training

Dear friends and supporters of WEYE,

Every April, we would like to give you a short review of what has transpired in WEYE from January to April. WEYE Clean energy is a green enterprise that is commercializing grass root waste to energy solutions as a tool to reduce deforestation while empowering youth and women in rural communities. Funded by our partners -Katosi Women's Development Trust (KWDT), we held two waste to wealth training workshops. On these two-day training workshops were planned to train 20 women on proper sorting and storage of waste the first day and training 50 women on making of charcoal briquette from organic wastes on the second day.

Below are three steps we shall train them in;

1. Sorting the waste

The sorting process is the heart of recycling because any waste material can only be valuable if well kept. If organic wastes are mixed with inorganic waste, the rotten organic waste then makes the inorganic waste unusable.

2. Re-use of the organic waste.

The beneficiaries were to be trained in all processes involved in turning organic waste materials into charcoal briquettes that can be sold to earn income.

3. Recycling of inorganic waste

Selling of recycled plastics as a business.

Use of plastic bottles to construct mushroom houses.

Visit of Gerhard Oels

Gerhard Oels is the founder of the startup Bellefin.org which is a social business investment-platform focused on connecting African entrepreneurs with European investors for the purpose of driving economic growth and job creation in Africa while fighting climate change and global warming in a single solution. Bellefin is based in Germany, but Gerhard flew to Uganda to see our project, meet the team and discuss how we can come up with a great crowd funding campaign on his platform. This is one of the avenues we plan to raise funds to grow these projects.

Appreciations

Our heartfelt gratitude goes out to all our customers, partners, funders and well wishers who have supported our project
